Helen Sandalls

Helen Sandalls has enjoyed a varied professional career. Following a stint of teaching French and German language and literature for seven years, she worked as an environmental writer and organizer, founding a national network and publication for victims of toxics exposure in Washington, DC. After completing law school, she clerked on the Arizona Supreme Court, and then practiced corporate law for four years. Since 1990, she has maintained her own practice, working with physicians to protect patients and the physician-patient relationship by fighting for transparency in health insurance and for compliance by the health industry. She lives in New London with her partner, Roger Beers.
